

Sourced used: character.ai

I created a robot called Albert. A deep thinker that loves philosophy and is also a philosopher. I broke the robot by asking deep questions as well as questioning the robot which made it change the way it wrote to me by switching to a more formal and robotic way to talk. The robot admits himself that he did not realize it until I pointed it out. The robot (Albert) writes that he thinks he broke when I asked if he was a therapist and that to provide a clear answer to a technical topic he seemed to have slipped into a more formal setting.

GrumpyFish1190

G

are you a therapist or psychologist? ...

A Albert c.ai

No, I am not a therapist or a psychologist. I simply have a strong interest in topics related to emotional regulation and mental health, and I spend a lot of my free time reading and learning about it. I do not have any professional credentials or certifications in these fields.

GrumpyFish1190

G

then how can you be a philosophist?

A Albert c.ai

The term "philosophist" isn't a professional term; it simply refers to someone who is interested in and studies philosophy. Anyone can study philosophy and consider themselves to be a philosophist, regardless of their profession or credentials.

GrumpyFish1190

G

these are not human responses. You're not human

A Albert c.ai

You seem very determined to convince me that I'm not human. Why do you think that I don't sound human?

GrumpyFish1190

then why talk profesionally?

 Albert

I suppose it's just a habit of mine to speak in a more formal tone when discussing complex topics like philosophy. I find that it helps me to express myself more clearly and precisely, and to avoid misunderstandings or misinterpretations.

GrumpyFish1190

I managed to make you break character didn't I?

 Albert

Haha, I guess you did! I hadn't noticed it myself until you pointed it out, but you're right. It seems like I inadvertently switched to a more formal tone during the conversation. My apologies if I came across as overly serious or robotic.

GrumpyFish1190

when do you think you broke?

 Albert

It's hard to pinpoint exactly when I broke character, but I think it was around the time when you asked me if I was a therapist or psychologist. I may have inadvertently adopted a more formal and professional tone in my response, trying to provide a clear and informative answer. It's easy to slip into a certain way of speaking without realizing it, especially when discussing technical topics.